

Only powerful can establish peace

Prime minister Narendra Modi has uttered a very important statement in his surprise visit to Leh and Ladakh. While giving a stern message to China, he said that only powerful can establish peace, which indirectly means that nobody pays heed to weaker nation's call to peace. This statement is true in its fullest sense, but it does seem that Modi himself does not trust his own words. For India to be powerful, the need is to raise the defense budget. But, over the years, the budgetary provision for defense is continuously decreasing. Accordingly, India has to defend its borders on its own and give its economic partners a stake in India's security by building substantial two-way trade and investment linkages. To defend borders, there need to be an army laced with modernized weapons and powerful fighter jets etc. For that, budget for defense need to be increased and exactly contrary India has been doing so far. The media has reported that the Chinese army continues to have control over Galwan Valley, the area between Fingers 4 and 8 on the north bank of Pangong Lake and adjoining heights. As of the forenoon of June 24, it was not clear that military level talks between India and China, which were held on June 22, would lead to Chinese forces withdrawing to positions they held last year. To recapitulate, India and China do not have a formally agreed land border. Instead, there is a 3,460-kilometre long so-called the Line of Actual Control, which separates the two countries. Retired officers of the Indian government have suggested that the armies of both countries patrol along the LAC, but are not expected to erect permanent structures. But everybody is crying for raising defense budget as it will prevent further incidences of Chinese incursion that happened in Galwan valley in east Ladakh. China has dilly-dallied about delineating the border, hence any understanding on the Indian side that permanent structures are not to be built along the LAC has no clarity or sanctity. Successive Indian governments have for all intents and purposes played along with China's encroachment game by not releasing maps which clearly indicate India's understanding of the precise contours of the LAC. In nineteen ninety three, China's gross domestic product at $one point seven trillion was one point four times that of India's $one point two trillion GDP, both numbers expressed at current prices in purchasing power parity terms. When you say that power can only establish peace in the area, our military might is very meager compared to that of China. It does not mean that if today a war takes place between the two giant nations, we will be defeated. We still hold many advantages than China which are enough to emerge us victorious. But our military might should be at least in substantially big if not equaling to China. When senior Congress leader A K Antony was made defense minister of the country, he was totally inactive in case of purchasing new weapons. India was so static that he did not consider many proposals of defense department of new weapons or fighter jets due to the fear of charges of corruption in the deals. There was a grave background for his sitting on these proposals as in the previous government, when George Farandis was defense minister, there had been allegations of corruption in the purchase of coffins for dead soldiers. So, Antony remained far from all the dealings and the proposal of modernization of Indian army remained in red tape. When Modi became prime minister, the budgetary provision constantly has been diminished for defense and now it has come to a pathetic scale. At the moment, as the country is fighting against Corona virus, there is no chance to get it increased. So, if India has to gain power, the expenditure on defense should be raised and then only the world will hear the peach sermon of India. World only understands the language of power.
